Matrix film review

The matrix is everything we live and breathe, it is the world that has been pulled over our eyes to blind us from the truth. This is the concept that the Wachowski brothers have created in their 1999 movie "The Matrix".

Neo a computer hacker learns from mysterious rebels the true nature of his reality and his role in the war against the machines. Neo joins the fight as he is prophesised to be there saviour. Neo goes from fight scene to fight scene battling varies of enemies finally ends up realizing his true nature and the ability with in him.

The cast of this film is effective and suitable for the story line. There are not many big names in this film so the actors aren't competing to look the best and work together well effectively. Keanu Reeves plays a believable role as Neo throughout the movie.

The Matrix is mostly talked about for its special effects which are quiet amazing when it ranges from simply blowing stuff up and slow motion combat. The world of the matrix gives the effect that it is a computer program which you find out it is early in the film

The central theme of the film is technology, the idea that if we keep advancing technology it will eventually takes over the world. This theme is present throughout the film and is used well to create an exciting and entertaining plot.

In all this is a well produced film with an original storyline, I would rate this film 4 out of 5 because it wasn't perfect.