

Artists ~~are~~ intentions in the production and meaning of artworks is important. In order to create an artwork an artist must have an understanding about the meaning.

An example of this are the artworks of Frida Kahlo. By looking at these artworks you can automatically tell that they are based on personal experiences as they are painted in ~~such~~ such detail. Kahlo used to paint of her experiences of misfortune while lying in her hospital bed. One ~~of~~ of her artworks that shows ~~the~~ great meaning is the one where she is lying in a hospital bed ~~in~~ while she miscarriages. This painting shows blood flow from her cervix.

All artworks ~~are~~ ~~ex~~ have a meaning behind them. Without meaning they would be nothing but useless artifacts with no history or story to tell. All artworks convey some kind of meaning whether it is how they were made, why they were made, whether they tell a story, a reproduction of another artwork or an artist's expression. They are all originals and all convey meaning no matter how deep the meanings.

Other examples of evaluating the importance of artists' intentions in the production and meaning of artworks are Gordon Bennett an Aboriginal artist who bases his artworks around the ~~poverty~~ and racism towards Aboriginals, Goya who bases artworks around war and the poverty war brings and also Munch who is greatly famous for "The Scream" which conveys meaning of madness.

These examples show great meaning towards these artworks and also shows how important meaning is when it comes to the production of great artworks.